Farmers SWEEP Up Support: Block Grant Options Propel Sustainability in San Joaquin Valley

By Kristin Withrow, CSDA Communications Specialist

In the fertile agricultural hub that is the San Joaquin Valley, farmers are gathering to learn about groundwater sustainability and energy efficiency in farming practices. These gatherings are hosted by Stockton East Water District (SEWD), North San Joaquin Water Control District (NSJWCD) and South San Joaquin Irrigation District (SSJID) in an effort to distribute block grant money provided by the California Department of Food & Agriculture. The three districts are serving as program administrators for a pilot block grant through the State Water Efficiency and Enhancement Program (SWEEP).

The districts have joined together to coordinate education about the block grants and how they can align with efficiency upgrades. They began by setting up the grower's meetings to help farmers understand the types of projects that qualify, and the application requirements. The SWEEP block grants will be awarded for projects ranging from $20,000 to $200,000, with applications being accepted in May, August, and November. But first, farmers must decide what they're growing this season.

"Crop values are down substantially," said NSJWD General Manager Steve Schwabauer. Farmers in the area traditionally have grown grapes, cherries, and all types of nuts. "Supply and demand is out of balance, which is affecting their decisions," he explained.

SEWD General Manager Justin Hopkins explained: "During COVID when shipping was interrupted, nuts couldn't be shipped and were stockpiled. Once the supply chain disruptions eased, the nut exports were shipped from those stockpiles, greatly reducing demand for the following year's nut crop."

The block grants have no matching requirements, so projects that include both water and energy efficiencies and are under $200,000 may be approved in their entirety. The group hopes to receive applications for projects that take surface water off their existing distribution systems and connects it to an existing on-farm distribution system. Once connected, the farmer would be able to utilize surface water to irrigate while maintaining the ability to switch to groundwater pumping in years without surface water availability.

“For wine grapes, there is debate as to whether the oversupply is caused by too many grapes and wine production or too much imported inexpensive wine from Spain, Portugal and South America.”

The low hanging fruit (pun intended) would be a project on a farm near one of the districts’ surface water distribution facilities that has relied on groundwater in the past. Using grant funds to connect to the surface water distribution system would conserve groundwater and require less energy to pump.

The grower’s meetings have been hosted in each district’s area with training provided by the Stockton East Water District staff. “Technical advising is being provided by the San Joaquin Farm Bureau Federation and the UC Cooperative Extension,” said SSJID Water Resources Coordinator Brandon Nakagawa.

While each district has formed under slightly different agreements, all share the goal of ensuring sustainability in the San Joaquin Basin.

The districts are providing on-demand support to the program that ultimately will serve to ensure the districts meet their strategic plans: While each district has formed under slightly different agreements, all share the goal of ensuring sustainability in the San Joaquin Basin.

“The primary thing all of us do is provide surface water in lieu of groundwater, or try to recharge groundwater,” said Schwabauer.

This alliance between districts, in conjunction with the state and advisory agencies embodies the spirit of collective action toward a goal for the greater good.

As farmers navigate the complexities of changing resources and fluctuations in market conditions, they find support in the agencies that provide water resources with an eye toward the future of resilience and sustainability.
